Three years ago the armies of the South surrendered, and gave in to the principle for which Congress and the people of the North had waged the war, viz: that no State could sunder its connection with the Federal Government, and that the Union was perpetual and indivisible. None could doubt the good faith of the Southern people in this surrender. Gooded by the continued attacks upon their constitutional rights made by Abolition fanatics and demagogues, they had essayed to establish for themselves a separate nationality and independence. LEXINGTON RACES.

A Fine Day and Exciting Sport. The Unexpected Triumph. BIG HAUL FOR SMALL BETTERS.

[Special Dispatch to the Louisville Courier.]
Lexinoros, Sept. 17, 1866.—The clear, bright, crisp, fall weather of this morning has added materially to the attendance upon the race-course, and to the exciting interest of the races. No rain fell likes hight, and the bright sunshine of to-day, accompanied by the dry wind, is rapidly guitting the trace in time order, atthough at present the mod is tough, making the work pretty sevice upon the metitesome steeds, which to-day flew over it like live Arabians over the dust.

Money seems to have become more plentiful among the sporting men and strangers, and the bidding at the pools is more spirited than our physicisms.

Thus far not a single set of impropriety or had conduct has occurred during the meeting, either in the city or upon the course, and from present indications, the meeting bids fair to grove a great success in spite of the bad weather in the carlier part of the week.

The result of to-day, was a terrible blow to the knowing ones; the winner was sold last night in pools of floe, for five and six dollars; and the needs fellows with small capital, raked in the long fellows with small capital, raked in the long piles. The following is the summary of to-day's race:
